Saturday July Cyanotype Workshop

Learn One of the First Photographic Processes

Saturday, July 18, 2009, 10am-4pm taught by Terri Dilling
 $75 APS members / $85 non-members

The cyanotype (blue print) was one of the first photographic printing processes invented. It is a very accessible process that can be explored in various ways during this one day workshop. The instructor will provide paper already prepared with the cyanotype solution, which will be exposed in the sun and rinsed in water. This is a contact printing method. Where the light reaches paper, it turns blue. Where light is blocked, it remains the paper color.

Students should bring materials for exposing the imagery. You can use computer generated text and images printed onto transparencies, drawings and photos copied onto transparencies, or drawings produced directly on acetate. You can also use objects such as lace, string, leaves, gears, marbles, etc. to create shapes and cast shadows. Experimentation can produce some really interesting results!

This workshop will be taught by Atlanta-based artist Terri Dilling. Terri's primary printmaking mediums are monotype, screenprint and cyanotype.
